SUBJECT : Refinements of Anticipatory Papers on East Asia

There is now general agreement on three anticipatory papers covering East Asian topics. These are Permanent Vietnamese Occupation of Kampuchea; China and Taiwan -- Consequences of Reunification; and Consequences of Possible Detente in Sino-Soviet Relations. Amplications of these topics follow:

1. Permanent Vietnamese Occupation of Kampuchea. Although few in the Government are talking about it, the most likely outcome in Kampuchea is permanent Vietnamese occupation. What would be the long term consequences for Thailand and ASEAN? What benefits would accrue to the Soviets? To what extent could the visible Vietnamese presence be replaced by an ethnic Kampuchean puppet structure? In such circumstances would the Chinese continue their confrontation with Vietnam?

STAT

2. China and Taiwan -- Consequences of Reunification. Reunification in the near future is unlikely but it could happen. What are some scenarios for reunification? What contributions could Taiwan make to Chinese economic life? What political influences would Beijing assert in Taiwan? The US undoubtedly would benefit from reunification, but would there be some losses as well?

3. Consequences of Possible Detente in Sino-Soviet Relations. What factors drive China and the Soviet Union towards improved relations? What kinds of problems need to be solved to make an improvement in relations feasible? What would be the effects on US relations with the Soviet Union and on US strategic relationships worldwide? What are the advantages and disadvantages as viewed from China and from the Soviet Union?
